

over the forest, and left his pursuers so far behind, that he might have escaped; but rushing into a thick wood, his horns were entangled in the branches, where he was held till the hounds came up, and tore him in pieces. In his last moments he thus exclaimed, "How ill do we judge of our true advantages! The legs, which I despised, would have borne me away in safety, had not the antlers I was so vain of, betrayed me to ruin."

LESSON XX.

THE GRAPES, OR TEMPTATION RESISTED.

em-ploy-ment	ad-mi-ra-ti-on	at-trac-tive
in-ter-est-ing	un-ob-ser-ved	gra-ti-tude
dan-ger-ous-ly	temp-ta-ti-on	in-dus-tri-ous
en-ter-tain-ed	re-col-lec-ted	wist-ful-ly

Willy and Catherine were the only children of Widow Burton, and though their mother was very poor, yet there was not a happier family in the village.

William and Catherine went to school every day, which they liked very much, as they were attentive, industrious children; and right glad were they, when they came home from school, to tell their mother all the interesting things they had read, or to sing the little songs they had learnt. And right glad was their mother to hear their merry voices and footsteps again, after sitting alone, hard at work, all the day. But Willy and Catherine did not come home to be idle and dawdle about on the road like some children; they had always plenty to do. There was a little bit of garden ground attached to the cottage, and