EXERCISE 36.

(Comp. Pages 126-129.)

We see a caravan in the desert. The camels carry big bales. The Moors, who have daggers and sabres, sit on the camels. The sun rises. The men say their prayers. Soon the heat increases. All are tormented by an intense thirst. Far and near they see no water, no bush, no grass. At last they find a spring. The whole caravan is put up in a circle. There they remain for the night. They make a fire. The moon rises, when the sun has set. Under the tent it is night. Through the linen of the tent shines the lamp. The traveller sleeps within the tent, but the Arabs remain outside of it. They tell fairy-tales and adventures. Early in the morning the horses are (being) saddled. When this is done, the journey is (being) continued. Days and weeks pass by. The camel is (being) killed. At last they reach the end of their journey. —
